Historically, the frozen food market has been outperformed by fresh food. Despite being more affordable, frozen food has often been perceived as lower quality, but recent data has shown that this trend is shifting. Today's frozen food is very different to what your grandparents would have consumed.

Nowadays, the freezer section in a typical supermarket has a huge range of variety, including premium products focusing on a healthy lifestyle. There has been numerous research confirming the freezing's ability to preserve vitamins and nutrients in food too.

The real revolution of frozen is that it's available 24/7.

All in all, frozen food is the better choice for more sustainable, cost-effective living for the following 3 reasons:

Healthier Meals: Frozen meals have ditched the high sodium and preservatives for balanced, nutrient-rich options. Advances in freezing technology mean these meals preserve the freshness and nutritional value of their ingredients, catering to all dietary needs—from keto to vegan. Zero

Waste: Eco-friendly packaging and efforts to cut food waste underline the sustainable ethos of today's frozen meals. By harnessing the power of freezing, they deliver seasonal flavours year-round without the environmental cost of transporting fresh produce off-season.

More Affordable: As a result of zero waste, paper less packaging & less driving to the customer.
